WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Dry, unseasonably warm weather will continue today, but the high pressure ridge that has been over us will weaken a bit, so afternoon temperatures may be a few degrees cooler than the past few days. We will still have very low afternoon relative humidity today (7-15% range again), and warmest inland valleys will still be around 100 degrees. A small, off shore low pressure trough is moving slowly eastward and will begin to affect us overnight. Gusty south to southwest winds (7-18 mph, gusts up to about 30 mph) will develop Monday and relative humidity will be higher. Enough moisture will arrive with this system for a small chance of afternoon and evening light showers or thunderstorms over the northeast portion of Northern Operations. Tuesday will be in between systems as another low pressure well off shore moves east toward the coast. That system will arrive off shore Wednesday and gradually move inland overnight and Thursday. Some light precipitation and perhaps a few thunderstorms will develop over Northern Operations late Wednesday and Thursday, especially over the mountains (all of them). Temperatures will cool significantly with Thursday the coolest day of the week and likely to be about 5 degrees below normal. Wednesday will be another windy day with moderately strong south to southwest winds again. There is low confidence of the weather pattern for Friday and the weekend. It will depend on how quickly the low moves east out of our area, or whether it stalls over California instead. For now, warmer, drier conditions are forecast. Some light north and off shore winds could develop over the weekend as well, but this is all definitely subject to change. The marine layer will be somewhat shallow today then deepen again over the next few days.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

There will be little change in temperature through Tuesday as strong high pressure remains over the Desert Southwest. Mountain temperatures will be in the 80s to low 90s, with mid-90s to 108 in the valleys. Humidity will slowly increase across the region through Tuesday, with minimum humidity mainly between 12% and 25% today. There will be enough moisture for isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms over the Sierra and over the mountains and deserts of Southern California east of the Cajon Pass through Tuesday. An area of low pressure will form off the California Coast bringing abundant moisture into the region from what is now Hurricane Odile Wednesday through the end of this week. Shower and thunderstorm activity will increase over the Sierra and over Southern California south and east of Los Angeles County Wednesday. Depending on exact track of the low pressure area, it is possible for scattered showers and thunderstorms to cover the entire region Thursday and Friday. Significant cooling will take place starting Wednesday, with below normal temperatures expected Thursday and Friday. Winds will be light through the end of this week.
